

American Studies

Please refer to the current Undergraduate Academic Catalog to see the course descriptions and a major description with requirements for American Studies.

The American Studies major is interdisciplinary in nature, designed to provide students with a flexible, multifaceted approach to the study of American society. Since the major provides much latitude in the selection of courses, students are encouraged to work closely with the program director and their advisor in choosing courses which will form a cohesive curriculum. The major provides excellent preparation for students interested in law, journalism and communications, library science, museum work, teaching, and many areas of public service.

New students considering a major in American Studies should select any of the electives that the major accepts (see the catalog for a list of courses) and HIST 202: First-Year Seminar in American History, which fulfills the First-Year Seminar requirement and can count as an elective towards either the History major or the American Studies major.

Below please find some examples of first semester schedules for an American Studies major. There are many variations of a first semester schedule; the examples are just meant to help you see that there are many ways to reach the same goals.

For information about the General Education Requirements Met below visit the General Education Requirements website.

*These paths assume fall matriculation. Students entering in the spring semester will make appropriate adjustment for sequencing issues.

\*This particular course is in a discipline that allows students with demonstrated competence upon admission to UMW (such as AP/IB credit, dual enrollment, etc.) to begin courses at a higher level. Please read the Academic Planning Guide carefully to see if you meet the requirements. For example: students may begin at any level language course for which they feel prepared (101, 102, 105, 201, 202 or 205), but must then complete the rest of the sequence in order without repeating or skipping any levels.*
